Grown up that shrunk

Little People Company furniture is created with a passion for classic style, superior quality and fair trade.

Little People Company's many designs were found around old castles and mansions in Europe and then shrunk to fit children in size. To cite a few examples, the two teak benches, Nkosana and Sala are both miniature versions of regular sized benches found in the beautiful Bernstorff Park Rose Garden in north of Copenhagen. The small round chair, Rebecca, is a child sized version of a Boudoir chair, found in a castle outside Paris and the entire cast iron line was inspired by the adult version, found in an English mansion in Suffolk, UK.

To ensure top quality that will last for many generations, the furniture is produced in factories in Africa that normally produces adult furniture. All furniture is produced under fair trade principles, with wood from sustainable forestry and in consideration of the CO2 footprint of the production as well as recycling of materials.

The production of adult furniture naturally creates a large amount of bi-products, which can be used in the production of children's furniture. This is especially the case with the teak furniture pieces: Antoine and Georgia. All pine furniture is painted with lead free paint in Old White colour lending a more natural and antique feel to the children's universe.

The furniture lines are designed to mix and match. The wicker table, Amon and wicker chair, Louise go well together and the little pine chair, Anne-Sophie fits nicely with the desk, Oscar, as well as with the round table, Chipo. Chipo is designed for two or more children. Since children do not like hierarchy, a round table is more psychologically appropriate when seating two or more little people.
